

Being Different

A pleasant lady, Munlee brought this great sense of eloquence with her as she graced my office. When she spoke, you felt mesmerized by the range of topics she drew before you. Like an author speaking within the depths of her being, her radio quality voice enthralled you, and you felt relaxed being around her. Her intellectual nature never bores anyone, and keeps you in touch with the world about you.

Munlee had her own fears, and this could be explained using her chart. Saturn, which governs her partnership house is placed in the 12th, which happens to also be in a falling position, making this a double negativity. This meant two things. 1: there would be a difficulty in marriage or any partnership she pursued, and 2: her life was riddled with burdens. She informed me once that ever since her birth, her family was lacking wholesomeness. Her mother would refuse to communicate with her father and her father made things worse by interjecting his own harsh opinion of her. She was in the middle of this all, and at most times, felt like the cause of their tiffs, even when this was untrue in most cases.

Because of her home situation, Munlee was accustomed to being alone most of her life. Education was her only escape from loneliness, and she prided herself in betterment through studies, leading her to top the rest of her peers easily. She reasoned that the amount of time and effort she invested into these activities would determine her self worth, and it did. Never failing to seize the opportunity to upgrade her skills, she found herself obtaining a higher degree at a local university with top grades. Even though she scaled the heights with knowledge, she still was stumped by the one thing that eluded her: love.

With all her past relationships (which were short and few), she never got very deeply involved with anyone. Like a broken bridge, she meets her lover on one end, but always seem to fall short in crossing that bridge to consummate the relationship and seal a commitment with a ring. As she crossed the 40 year mark, she gave up all hopes of finding that special someone and redirected the rest of her energies into working. And she was practically indispensable to the company. Should she ever voice out even a hint of her resignation, her superiors would bend backwards just to keep her working under them. It was little wonder, for she was a true specialist in her area. She knew how to troubleshoot situations well, and was able to handle tough negotiations like clockwork. Her ability to mingle the crowd linked her with top notch brass in the business, and even racked in the business better than all her colleagues could do.

It was not enough. After years of deluding herself into thinking that maybe she would die alone, she came to me. “Roy. I come to you to ask one last time before I commit to a life of celibacy. Is there a hint of whether I will be married, and how and when it would occur?”

Seeing as how she popped me a 3-in-1 question, I checked her chart for the planets which could provide me with that answer, and I was happy to provide her with a satisfactory analysis in response.

“Jupiter would be moving into your 7th House of the horoscope, which positively indicates to me the possibility of a good partner coming into your life and offering you a serious proposition. The only thing that might hamper this is if you are choosy and overselective – which your chart seems to indicate to me- but that aside, there is a very good possibility of you succeeding in love and being married.”

For a brief moment, she entertained the possibility and I could see the glow in her eyes as she dreamed her inner thoughts, and then like the snap of my finger, she reverted back to her serious mode. Probably because she realized that I had to inform her of something else as well.

“What you also need to note is that Saturn would be in transit, and be in your 12th House. When this happens, one of two things could take place. Firstly, that man might be one who has been through disappointment and hard times, and comes from a foreign land. Secondly and lastly, because of this love, you might need to sacrifice everything in order to take up this man and this new challenge.” This made her hesitate, and she asked me if it was worth it. “You will never know, unless you try. You just have to be prepared by the fact that this man might not have anything to offer but love and hard work, and to slog off for the next 2 years in hardship, but after that... Your life will be the bees’ knees. You could reject this chance, and find yourself trapped in routine that leads to what you have always braced yourself for, and you just need to be at peace with your decision, no matter which one you take.”

It was difficult, but when she met the man, she chose the route of sacrifice. And those two years, as I read for her, were the toughest that she had ever had to endure. She moved to the country of her husband, and for those two years, felt very alone and worn out. But she steadied on, and waited out those two years in the hopes that what I predicted would come true.

Now, she just bought her first home abroad and for the first time as well, took a holiday out of the country. She contacted me and thanked me for my reading, and invited me to come and visit her should I ever fly to her country of residence.

“No. Thank you for making me feel blessed in being able to win this one for you.” I said, “When I go there, we shall celebrate your victory now, and pray for your success as you continue down this road of life.”
